Yes, everyone should take a close look at the new setup. It's why we did a 60 day announcement – to allow sufficient due diligence time.

We recognize the community wants to know about JS involvement in anything, even though he doesn't have the ability to move funds. That's why we made sure to be very clear about his name.

Note that wbtc.network will remain online on an ongoing basis and will always provide near real-time proof of reserves. So you'll see if anything changes provably and on chain. Further, it's the same BitGo technology and we won't sign transactions that don't have the corresponding mint/burn proof. Still offline keys, etc.

My main recommendation is don't jump to conclusions until you've done the diligence.
